Gin is a spirit which derives its predominant flavour from juniper berries . From its earliest origins in the Middle Ages, gin has evolved over the course of a millennium from a herbal medicine to an object of commerce in the spirits industry. Gin was developed on the basis of the older Jenever, and became popular in Great Britain when William of Orange, leader of the Dutch Republic, occupied the English and Scottish thrones with his wife Mary. Gin is one of the broadest categories of spirits, represented by products of various origins, styles, and flavour profiles that all revolve around juniper as a common ingredient.

In the Middle Ages, the wines from the coast of Champagne were treated as "Vins de France", which are produced throughout the Paris Basin. The only wines from the region of Reims and Epernay that don't do too much harm to those who drank it.

These wines bear the name we know they today. It since the reign of King Henry IV at the end of the sixteenth century: it was in Paris where appointed them for the first time as "wines of Champagne" . This term gave a lot of trouble let because, for example Reims, Champagne designated scope of infertile land, where they could only sheep graze: it was precisely all that opposed the vineyard!
